Researchers at the University of Paris fed the molecule C60 dissolved in olive oil to rats and found it almost doubles their lifespan with no chronic toxicity. "These results of importance in the fields of medicine and toxicology should open the way for the many possible biomedical applications of C60 including cancer therapy, neurodegenerative disorders, and aging," the researchers suggest.

An approximately 13.5 years old dog was diagnosed with cancer in April 2017 after a baseball sized tumor was removed from the dog's back leg. The cancer was diagnosed as Hemangiopericytoma Grade 3. Due to the dog's age and difficulty during and recovering from the tumor removal the vet did not believe that any of the standard treatment protocols would be effective in prolonging the subject's life. By November 2017 the subject's tumors had increased in size and the subject was having difficulty moving around and was generally lethargic and seemingly uncomfortable. In December 2017 the subject began a treatment protocol including the "C60" composition described herein. Within a few weeks the subject displayed increased energy and stamina and as was still alive as of the end of January 2018 well beyond the expected lifespan based upon the original diagnosis.

An approximately 10-year-old dog was found to have a tumor between the subject's shoulder blades behind the subject's neck. A biopsy was not performed at the request of the owner due to the fact that the owner did not want to put the subject through the trauma of surgery or chemotherapy. It should be noted that a littermate of the subject died of cancer in March 2016. By the spring of 2017 the subject's tumor was approximately 20 cm. times.18 cm that was visible above the natural line of his back. The subject experience coughing, this was surmised to be due to the tumor pressing down on the subject's lungs. In April 2017 the subject began a treatment protocol including the "C60" composition described herein in addition to a round of anti metastatic. By the end of January, the coughing had stopped and the tumor was no longer obviously visible without touching the subject to feel the tumor (the owner estimated that the tumor had been reduced by 2/3 the tumors original size).

A border collie mix dog was diagnosed with cancer on Jan. 11, 2018, at Oklahoma State University (OSU) Veterinary School. The subject was diagnosed with terminal cancer and was prescribed with chemo but this was only supposed to make the subject's final days more comfortable and nothing else. Within days the subject began a treatment protocol including the "C60" composition described herein in addition to an immediate diet change to a ketogenic diet as well as stopping the administration of previously prescribed pain medication. Within 24 hours of the first dosage the subject regained previously lost appetite and within a few days the subject displayed increased energy and stamina and started regaining lost weight. The subject is currently behaving normally and showing no outward signs of sickness.
